

Data Analysis and Report Writing focused on various forms of writing. It included many reminders that every detail, from grammar and spelling to format is critical in scholarly writing.

Our first project was to create a proposal for a Holiday Art Sale at a local high school. The proposal had to explain the details and background of the sale, and include a full project plan. It also included a flyer which could be used to advertise the event.

The next project was to explore various ways to represent data visually. We completed various types of charts and diagrams to display information in an engaging and compelling format.

Finally, we prepared a research proposal. I chose to study student reactions to a Capstone simulation experience in a school of business. The research proposal was prepared in a prescribed format, which included a literature review, project timeline, questionnaire and many other elements. This was my first experience in preparing such a proposal, and I learned a lot which I hope will prepare me for future coursework in this program.
